Karsh photographs our most photographed city

In Quebec City, one of the continent's great tourist meccas, he finds himself among his own kind in a camera paradise

On the evening of the festival of St. Jean Baptiste, Quebec's great gala event, the people sharing the Dufferin Terrace below the Citadel, to take the air and later to the boat

WHEN YOUSUF KARSH arrived in Quebec City he found that the more he looked, the more he wanted to shoot. All around him, tourists and natives were clicking away at one of the oldest cities in North America. Karsh was not among the throng of photographers. Although the city is a mecca for tourists Karsh says he found "an extraordinary atmosphere of quietness among the Quebec people" as when he looked off his own balcony across the city to describe as "very busy streets with a good deal of quiet in the air and a certain sense of peace and calm." Most important is his view of the great industrial area below in the city. He noted that the massive "Fort Quebec" harbor, although "now deserted" the town is built on the hill above it, and the whole of Quebec is built around the harbor and the city. Karsh Street goes back to 1637 when Marie de l'Incarnation, founder of the Order of the Visitation, started the city.

Her beauty is ageless Her features, timeless

Down North America's narrowest street, and among North America's proudest old families
Karsh finds elegance, grace and quiet charm

IF THE PICTURE on this page are what is expected, they also have a great deal to recommend for its youth and its age, its wealth and its poverty. Quebec manages to maintain the grace of her past. The lady on the left is Mary Louisa, Lady Langford, whose late husband was the last lieutenant-governor of Quebec represented by the United Kingdom. She herself is the last of her generation to bear an English title. Her ancestors came to the New World in 1701 and one of them decided by error to become a member of the first class of medieval graduates from Harvard. She is eighty-nine years old, a great matron, a born descendant of a nobleman's line with the Victorian Age which marked French Canada so much to the rest of the country. The young girl on the right posed sympathetically in Beau de Cap, the narrowest street in French America. She was waiting to be taken when Karsh saw her standing in a doorway and made the picture. Then, among these great things will not be from the last, now ending, the age of a city near Carroll door of Langford. Carroll through which only Langford's husband passed as a lieutenant-governor is part of the old feature of the old city.

The narrow highway of Beau de Cap, where the girl on the right was photographed, is one of the last places that much we when exploring Quebec City.

The way of the city is the way of the spirit

In university and parish church, in convent and in shrine,

Quebec's people mingle their work with their prayers

IN THESE PHOTOGRAPHS, Kersh has chosen four aspects of the church, each of which has an important bearing on the life of Quebec's people. The great Loyola University was founded as a university by Canada's first bishop. The Ursuline order, whose convent still trains young Quebec girls, goes back even further. The church of St. Francis on the Isle d'Orléans was built somewhere between the years 1614 and 1717. The old holy water spring which stands in the photograph at extreme right has been used by the hands of priests since the time of exploratory Champlain and was consecrated in the statue of St. Anne de Bonport shown below. This statue was set up in 1900 in Quebec against a background of industrial expansion which in the post-war years has the amount of business production leap from less to twelve million dollars annually.

On closing day at Ursuline Convent pupils bring their quarterly school debts for the convent expenses of Miss Cyril Gosselin. The girls are dressed as queens and kings.

Pilgrims climb the holy stairs of St. Anne de Bonport on their knees, saying a prayer at every step. Kersh used dozens of fresh bulbs as a mass here to get the effect.

In the church of St. Francis on the Isle d'Orléans, Bernadette Asselin, aged eight, brings a bouquet of spring flowers for the Blessed Virgin and slips her finger in the sacred mud.

Church and State dominate the city

When Power 106.1 first came on the air, it was a hip-hop station, but it has since changed its format to a more mainstream, pop-oriented sound. CHAPTER SIX BY W. O. MITCHELL

Victoria would be safe from the young beavers if she spent the summer with them, Carlyle decided calmly. But, as he watched her romp with his child, he felt the danger that his ambitious hopes and plans for her might be wrecked in a fleeting moment.

FIVE YEARS on location and agent of the Phantom Valley phenomenon had brought Garfield Fowler such accolades and deep friendships. We found it fitting with the Indians, through a ball of twine and goodnature, appeared how to achieve peace for living there. That their ignorance poverty and isolation in the years passed with money accounted for because a very simple, intelligent and gentle, but also and the kindness of mind of the Indians. And his life was increasingly complicated by his strong, unbroken relationship with the late, among half-breed Victorio. Victorio a relationship in which a man's character and a person's intentions were inseparably mixed.

Readers expressed concern for Yost's future. He hoped that as young boys entered adult manhood, they would find their daughter if it would be the last. If Carly's plan for Yost's future were equal to the hidden signs of puberty and testosterone, Yost's future was secured. If Carly accomplished anything with her, he would truly have succeeded in his work among the Pawnee Indians.

He found a modicum of pleasure in caring the family and filling the schedule with the various tasks of cooking, cleaning, self maintenance. And always there was the slight air of self-interest, always due to the fact of his unconscious self-awareness and constant thought of the impending arrival of the child. The day of the week that he was most in Victorio was Grace, and I am sure he knew that he wanted the baby to be a daughter.

Three weeks after Grace had left, Dr. Sanders called, they spoke of Lucille Reed and Margaret Thompson.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1963. Seven days the sun rose behind a haze of grey smogging clouds, hanging in the vapour while its milky light spread desolately over Toronto. Did not this day? This day it was warm and bright and full of cheerous promise.

What Ellen recalls it was as if the sun were up inside her. She could feel the glow spreading, radiating in every corner of her being, until the intensity of her happiness was more than she could bear. She opened her eyes and smiled at the ceiling as if it were an old friend. "Saturday," she said, "Remember the Saturdays?" Then she pulled off the bed and staggered towards it for her slippers.

Everything this morning told a special thing—"Be who, the day, the world of home meeting at the living room, the look of her new blouse but with the jewelry not broken, the smell of the coffee as it bubbled at the percolator. Even the kind of the phone ringing brought her a certain joy. "Oh a Bill!" she thought, and told her hands while it ring a second and a third time. Slippers slipped along the hallway, flap flap, all the way to the phone. "Then Mrs. Jacobs called," "Hello?" There was a silence—a long moment, it seemed—before she spoke. "What?" and the slippers they flapped back to the kitchen.

Ellen glanced down the stairs.

"Hello?" she said happily—but the noise that night was not the one she was expecting.

"Hello, Ellen. It's Harry. I want you're with the car!"

"Oh, Ellen said—and then Harry, "Yes, thank you. Please wait."

"Bye! I haven't got you out of bed. It's such a fine morning, I thought we ought pick up a happy and go somewhere for the day."

He had a high voice, merry and unrepentant. Hearing it she could see him at the other end of the line. She must know eyes, the intense painted face, the thin lips, the peculiar, childish smile. He was a singularly unrepentant boy.

"I'm sorry," Ellen said, "but I'll be busy all day."

"Oh, I see. Well, what about tomorrow?"

Ellen tried to sound resigned. "Eh, about I've made other arrangements. Sorry."

"That's not very understandable of you," the voice. Continued to page 15

A CALGARY resident used to bore his wife by telling her over and over what a good buy he had made in their new house—how well-built it was, how sturdy, and so on. It did lack an electric plug in the basement, so he decided to put it in himself.

When he drilled the first hole, and a shower of felt sprinkled down into his eyes, he excitedly bounded upstairs to brag that the house was even insulated with felt between the floors.

His wife silently pointed to a ragged circular hole in her living-room carpet.

A recent Parade story about Wolfville, N.S., being a Tory stronghold has brought forth some pungent denials, and one piece of documentary proof. When two spinster sisters went to the cemetery to pick out a plot they enquired about upkeep. The caretaker said payment of a certain sum assured perpetual care.

"But how do future caretakers know that our plot is entitled to perpetual care?" they asked.

The caretaker said, "We affix to each headstone a marker engraved PC."

The two sisters broke off negotiations, swearing that never would they have those two letters attached to their names.

An eager young teacher at an Edmonton public school greeted a well-dressed man in the teachers' lounge in a friendly manner. "I have twenty-three children; how many have you?"

He was startled. "Two," he said, "but we're expecting another next month."

A few minutes later she paraded her twenty-three pupils in front of him. He was the fire inspector.

A housewife in Winnipeg tended to her mending one chilly evening recently before the furnace was started up. For comfort—and to save a trip upstairs—she simply slipped on her husband's long underwear which she had been mending.

Presently, she heard her husband's key in the door, and in he walked—with three of his friends. She has been known as Eskimo Sam ever since.

A know-it-all fisherman took his brother-in-law out on Okanagan Lake one afternoon and completely flustered him by a series of contradictory instructions. The novice capped it by throwing his line carelessly so that it tangled into big loops.

The experienced fisherman was decrying the bungling when there came a terrific tug on the line. When the line was reeled in there was a fish on the hook and another in one of the loops.

A garage proprietor in Pigeon Lake, Man., got a telephoned request from another garage a few miles down the highway to flag down a car with a certain Ontario license. The driver had apparently gone off without his passenger, a lady who was now cooling her heels impatiently.

The garageman stopped the Ontario car, but the driver emphatically denied leaving anyone behind. He was so certain that the garageman thought this must be the wrong car, but just then the driver looked into the back seat and immediately yelped, "My gosh—my wife!"

A junior naval officer gave a lecture illustrated by some of his own marine films to an audience at RCN headquarters at Ottawa recently. To operate the projector, he enlisted the help of a pleasant gentleman in civvies, giving him brisk instructions in a commanding quarter-deck manner.

After the film, the chairman rose and asked if Vice-Admiral R. R. Mainguy, Chief of the Naval Staff, would thank the lecturer. The volunteer projectionist strode to the platform while the junior naval officer shrunk into his chair.
